Air Purifying Plants

There are a lot of chemicals in our homes, but did you know that household plants can clean the air you breathe inside your home or office? During the photosynthesis process, plants can actually remove toxins from the air, such as benzene and formaldehyde within 24 hours. Plants alleviate air-pollution by eliminating contaminants from the air through their leaves, stems and roots and provide humidity and oxygen.

Not all plants need to be placed near a window, however try to keep the plant away from a constant draft, as this reduces its effectiveness.

Here is a list of the plants that best clean the air:

- Peace Lily
- Boston Fern
- Ficus
- Dwarf Date Palm
- English Ivy
- Dracaena Janet Craig
- Rubber Plant
- Bamboo Palm
- Lady Palm

Want to speed up the process of purifying the air in your home? There's a product called the Andrea Air Purifier which uses a household plant to intensify the natural absorptive and metabolic properties of living plants. You purchase the unit separately and put your choice of plant in the container. Their website is www.andreaair.com. The Andrea claims to be 40 times more efficient than standard HEPA/carbon filters.

Lisa Chadsey runs a personal training business from her well-equipped basement in Coyote Run, called Infituation. She's been creating customized work-out and nutritional programs since 2005. Chadsey suffered from health problems and was on several medications until she took her health into her own hands. "I was tired of popping pills and worried about their long term effects on my health." Chadsey also teaches health seminars and has helped 100+ people since she's started her program. "I know how frustrating it is to feel out of shape and unhealthy. I've taken what I've learned about helping myself and I use it to help other people." For more information on personal training or health seminars, call Lisa at 720-219-2990
